BEYOND ENKRIPTION – A BRIEF SYNOPSIS

A copy of Beyond Enkryption's final high-resolution front cover

Beyond Enkription is the first stand-alone book in a series of six autobiographical espionage novels. The Burlington Files mainly based on Bill Fairclough's life in 1974. Part of the core plot is centred on the Honourable Beyond Enkription was self-published as an eBook and paperback in 2014. The official date of publication was the fiftieth anniversary of the opening chapter in Beyond Enkription and was “coincidentally” on the day as Bill Fairclough's father's birthday. In August 2015 a hardback version was published by D. All versions of the book are available worldwide.

Bill Fairclough was named as the author of Beyond Enkription for legal reasons. The copyright for The Burlington Files is owned by The Burlington Files Limited.

Beyond Enkription was “written for film”: i.e. it was not published to make profits as a book per se but solely with screen adaptation in mind. As an autobiographical journal it reads like a sophisticated Diary of Anne Frank. It is not a film script but can be readily adapted into such. That is why Bey referred to as a “Novelog” on The Burlington Files website. Endorsements and reviews of the book are available on The Burlington Files website.

The book is not like a normal Le Carré concoction adorned with flowery diction and it's not about a flowerpot who saves the world at the end of each book in the series. It's about down to earth real espionage.

It has not been marketed like a traditional spy novel would be having been “offered” to the film industry. Accordingly, the book has to date not hit the charts other than in obtuse ways in China and old Soviet states such as the Ukraine and Bulgaria. It is estimated that in aggregate over 60,000 copies were sold to eBook libraries within a year or so of its publication on Kindle.

In 2020 David Alexander Cardamone^[11], an aficionado of all things to do with espionage, created Enkription Book Trailer as a gift for Bill Fairclough after having been beguiled by reading Bey or Enkription book trailer video is accessible via <https://bit.ly/TBFL-Video>. The video is extraordinary given that Cardamone was born deaf.

History of Beyond Enkription

Bill Fairclough started writing Beyond Enkription in 1975 while in an isolation ward in a UK hospital where what was eventually diagnosed as cytomegalovirus. However, it was only in 2009 that work on the book became earnest. According to Bill Fairclough, the rationale for putting pen to paper was to create a TV series to show the world just how much it had been duped by those illustrious civil servants, Ian Fleming and John le Carré).

In July 2009 Bill Fairclough was approached again to try to make some films loosely based on his life at the time he was still heavily involved with Faire Sans Dire and acting as a director for various production companies. Through intermediaries he contacted two well-known film production companies to ask for making films comprising a pot-pourri of unusual concepts and experiences based on his some unconventional and maverick dual existence.

Despite all their initial enthusiasm, the negotiations with those companies' executives came to nothing. The production companies advised Bill that he must first present his material in book and/or film script form. His approach to one US corporation eventually landed on stony ground when MGM, which produced the Bond films, filed for bankruptcy. MGM has since recovered. The other household name film production company approached was based in the UK but had a full production agenda for many years ahead and still Accordingly, The Burlington Files series was born and Beyond Enkription written and published. It then went on an up-market tour based on just a few months of Bill Fairclough's life in London in 1974 and Beyond Enkription and explained in the news about Beyond Enkription.
